

I don't want to keep to the same tune, but if we want to add a Division to IPSC Rifle Competition Rules there is a procedure to follow. There are competition rules in any sport and if you don't abide by them you are not competing in the same sport any more. I doubt very much that the tactical name would be acceptable to many other countries in the world who have their own political problems, eg in Germany it is illegal in any shooting competition, including IPSC, to shoot on the move. If you institute a Division that is not according to IPSC Competition Rules it is not an IPSC competition, you need to take note of the requirements of the SAPSA insurance policy in this respect.

Such firearms with integral optical sights are usually military issue only? Exacerbating the political correctness issue?

We are athletes participating in a recognised sport according to internationally accepted and approved rules and should always be seen as such, immaterial of our origins and immaterial of what we think of the word athletes. Our sport equipment happen to be firearms where other sports use obsolete military equipment, such as archery, fencing, discus, javelin, etc.
